Natural Bridge of Virginia.

The Natural bridge of Virginia overlooks the James river valley, being on the western slope of the Blue Ridge mountains and near the center of the state. It is situated on a picturesque plateau, 1,500 feet above sea level, on the southern part of the famous Shenandoah valley, with grand mountain scenery on every hand. Its height is 215 feet, and it is 100 feet wide and has a span of 90 feet. It is a single block of limestone of many shades of color, crossing over a ravine through which rushes a swift stream known as Cedar brook. The path down into the canyon follows a tumbling brook under old arbor vitae trees. The visitor, after threading this devious path, suddenly sees the arch towering above him, a singularly impressive spectacle. Washington when surveyor for Lord Fairfax visited the Natural bridge and carved his name on the smooth side of the archway, where it may still be seen.--Argonaut.

Mahogany Trees.

The observations of H. N. Thompson, conservator of forests for southern Nigeria, indicate that the mahogany tree grows much more rapidly than the number of so called annual rings suggests. Mr. Thompson thinks that they show three or four well marked zones of growth each year, corresponding to the four seasons. Both forest trees and those grown in the botanical garden exhibit the same phenomenon. On the site of the town of Ilaye, destroyed sixty years ago, a forest has grown up containing mahogany trees with trunks exceeding ten feet in girth.

Grant's Tomb. Little in the way of vandalism ever has been discovered at Grant's tomb, but policemen assigned to that beat say that many smokers who wander in that vicinity go out of their way to scratch parlor matches on some part of the mausoleum. Such a scratch is almost indelible.--New York Press.
